

Fighting For You, Too

Gabriel M. Gurman

I'm not sure whether you'll understand or agree with my perspective, but, never mind, I'll share my thoughts.

I'll begin with some statistics; please forgive me if you're already familiar with them. The global Muslim population comprises approximately 1.8 billion people, accounting for 24% of the world's population. There are 57 Muslim countries, constituting around 25% of all UN member states.

Additionally, certain non-Muslim countries have substantial Muslim populations:

- 7-15%: Belgium, Russia, France, Georgia, Kenya, Sweden
- 16-30%: Cyprus, Montenegro, Singapore
- Over 30%: Ethiopia, North Macedonia

These percentages are dynamic, given that Muslims worldwide tend to have higher fertility rates than the rest of the population in their respective countries. Over the past 50 years, the global Christian population increased by 47%, while the Muslim population surged by almost 250%.

Now, let's delve further. The map below illustrates the distribution of Muslim countries worldwide.

Take a moment to observe the map. Can you identify any wealthy Muslim countries aside from a few with substantial oil reserves? In essence, many Muslim countries are poor.

Now, reexamine the map, and note how many of the 57 Muslim countries are democracies. If you're unsure, here's the answer: only three (Albania, Indonesia, and Malaysia) are considered flawed democracies, meaning they experience limited issues in democratic functioning.

To summarize, many Muslim countries grapple with poverty and totalitarianism, where decisions are made by unelected individuals or elected officials benefitting from questionable election processes.

However, we're currently in a globalized era. Anyone with access to a computer can quickly determine where life is good and citizen rights are respected. Consequently, citizens in Muslim countries are increasingly interested in relocating, selecting their new homeland based on specific local data, numbers, and legislation.

If done legally, obtaining new citizenship is straightforward. However, when borders are closed, illegal immigration becomes a more viable option and, at times, seems encouraged. These individuals may not undergo a process of acclimatization and adaptation to the new reality; they may remain Muslims, uneducated, and potentially fanatical. This situation can strain the host country's resources while perpetuating demographic growth.

Now, let's shift our focus to the next map !

Do you see Israel? Do you notice its neighbors? Can you identify any non-Muslim country close to Israel? No, there isn't one.

Let's summarize the situation:

1. The Muslim world faces challenges. Compared to a century ago, Muslims are now aware that in many parts of the world, life is better, and reaching those areas is feasible. Western countries, with people who are old, tired and lazy, seek foreign manpower, contributing to the continuous increase in the percentage of Muslims in these nations.

Interesting detail: Our army's counterintelligence gathered data on the role of Gazans working in Israel in preparing the barbarian invasion on October 7, 2023. They provided Hamas with detailed information, including maps and details of every house, family, and military camp. Does this raise concerns for Western Europe? Could similar precise details be used in a future war against Western countries?

2. Muslims recognize that Western countries hinder their aspirations for global dominance. While Muslim nations possess people, oil, and wealth, they need time to establish supremacy.
3. The most significant event for the Muslim world in the last fifty years has been Iran's transformation into a totalitarian, fundamentalist state, representing a potent combination of a large population, immense oil reserves, and ultra-religious leadership. Iran's path to nuclear capability is advancing, making it a frontline force against the non-Muslim world.

The so-called Arab opposition against Iran is temporary and weak. The rich Arab countries do not have a chance to oppose Iran, they do not have large populations, and they are as lazy as the Europeans, since only foreigners work there.

Conquering the world is a gradual process, and Iran's ultimate goal aligns with ISIS's: creating a vast Muslim caliphate to spread faith, culture, dictatorship, and eventually, global dominance.

4. The initial step in this conquest is the annihilation of Israel. In the eyes of Muslim leaders, Israel is a vulnerable target due to its size, being surrounded only by Muslim countries, and its Jewish identity. The world's current stance against Israel in the Gaza conflict reflects the global sentiment against Jews.

Why is Israel a sure victim ? First, because it is a small national entity, surrounded only by Muslim countries. Secondly, because it is a... Jewish country, and Jews are hated all over the world. Look what is happening these days: all the world is against Israel and condemns its military activity in the Gaza strip, not taking into consideration who started the current war and what a huge price Israel already paid: that in just a couple of hours more Israeli citizens had been killed than during the full five years of the 2nd Intifada (2000-2005).

5. However, the Muslims are mistaken. Jews have no other homeland. Antisemitism persists worldwide, but Israel will remain a Jewish country. The mistake of the world lies in viewing Israel as the sole target; it is merely the first obstacle in the Muslim world's pursuit of global dominance. While the chance for Muslim world conquest remains a remote reality, it cannot be ignored.

Reconsider the title of this text. Do you still believe I am exaggerating in asserting that Israel is only the first target? Can the Western world continue hating Jews and Israel, hoping the Muslim world will "solve" the Jewish problem?

I know nobody can guarantee Israel's continued existence, except us, the Israelis. Rest assured, this time, we won't die alone. The Dimona « textile factory » is still under our control.

One more thing: if you consider Putin's Russia the real enemy, think again. Russia is a paper tiger. Putin aims to restore the Tzar/communist empire, and nothing more. Consider this when assessing today's real dangers.

Wishing you all a peaceful day.
